Be Part of Something BIG
2013 Sentinels on the Sound - 10 Summer Lighthouse Saturdays

All summer-long, join us as we celebrate New London's lighthouse heritage. Events take place on ten Saturdays, from July 6 through September 7, 2013. (Look inside for the full schedule of activities.) For the 3rd year, the New London Maritime Society - Custom House Maritime Museum, in partnership with the Henry L. Ferguson Museum and the Ledge Light Foundation, present a regional celebration of all things lighthouse. This year features lighthouse boat tours, a trip to Plum Island, a concert by pianist Martin Berkofsky, exhibitions, talks, one-time events and special offers. We are especially pleased that CT rides is bringing trains to New London on Saturdays all summer long: welcome!

Along with the fun, we are launching a major fund-raising campaign: Be Part of Something BIG, an effort to restore & repaint New London Harbor Light. We maintain that there are things worth saving, and New London’s lighthouse -- the oldest and tallest on Long Island Sound -- is one of them. Our goal is to raise $150,000 from the public towards the total of near-$300,000 required for the task (tenting, scaffolding, scraping, re-pointing, painting). Already we have more than $60,000 from sponsors and foundations. Our goal is to raise $150,000 by October, 2013, to match a State of Connecticut Historic Restoration Fund grant to reach our ultimate goal of $300,000. Sponsors to date include The Chester Kitchings Family Foundation, The Frank Loomis Palmer Fund, and Hefel Masonry.

How can you help? I'm glad you asked!

Any donation is helpful. Send it to New London Maritime Society, 150 Bank St. New London, 06320

Bring a friend to visit the Custom House; take a boat trip, hear a concert: Be a part of something BIG. And thank you for your support.
From Our “Oval Office”
What…and Who…Is The Custom House Maritime Museum?
And why should you care?

The Custom House Maritime Museum – New London Maritime Society (NLMS) is an organization of community volunteers – with one great Professional Director, housed in the oldest continually operating Custom Office in the nation. It is a historical society, presenting and offering context for the rich past of this country and of this region. It is also a forward-looking steward of our shores, its lighthouses and its activities.

As a historical society, the Custom House is actually a community resource which welcomes both stories and artifacts offered by our regional neighbors for display and safe-keeping, and which also welcomes art and interpretive works celebrating the deep maritime tradition of this nation.

As a steward of our shores, the organization works to keep our lighthouses in community non-profit hands and open to the public. This is, if you will, our “Brand”. For lighthouses have been called the American counterpart of the cathedrals and castles of Europe.

Given this dual mission, this volunteer organization is constantly in need of funds and of committed volunteers. In fact our Head Docent, Bill LaRue, has developed a syllabus for the training of new docents. The work is fascinating…and the comraderie is heart-felt.

PLEASE CONSIDER CONTRIBUTING YOUR TIME AND YOUR FINANCIAL RESOURCES.
WE NEED YOU.

Thank you very much.

Headlines from History

This summer we are celebrating the fifteenth anniversary of the Frank L. McGuire Maritime Library with an exhibition focused on people and places from New London’s storied history. The city’s newspapers provide perhaps the most striking links with times past; the earliest on view is the full front page of the Morning Telegraph devoted to the opening of the first Thames River railroad bridge in 1889. Only from that time forward could one ride a train between New York and Boston without major interruption. Three decades later, selections from an astonishing 100-page special edition of The Day, commemorating its fiftieth anniversary in 1931, offer glimpses of the city as it was 82 years ago, a time of growing optimism despite the travails of the Great Depression. Books, prints and exquisitely detailed 19th-century charts of Long Island Sound round out the exhibit, which will be on view at the Custom House through July.

From the Ledge Lighthouse Foundation

104 years old, the New London Ledge Lighthouse has withstood more than a century of severe weather to shine brightly and guide mariners at sea safely home. The Ledge Lighthouse Foundation is hard at work at ongoing maintenance and restoration, repairing hurricane and winter storm damage, and creating gallery space for new maritime history exhibits. A corps of volunteers is continuing the work once done by keepers to ensure this beloved local landmark will stand strong for years to come. If you haven’t ever visited Ledge Lighthouse, do so this season. You will enjoy spectacular views of the surrounding lands and seas, tour exhibits that will tell you the story of this unique place, and even meet “Ernie,” the ghost, legend says haunts Ledge Light. You will roam a building in the middle of the ocean, a building which is part of the soul of this region and its rich maritime history.

Artist J.H. Torrance Downes, Eva & John Henry, brought the original drawing for Connecticut’s Preserve The Sound license plate to add to our new Lighthouse of Eastern Long Island Sound exhibition.
While doing research in clipping files this spring in the Frank McGuire Library at the Custom House Maritime Museum, I came across a news account of a tragic accident that revealed a long-forgotten role played by New London’s Custom House during the construction of Race Rock Light. The story unfolded thusly: On the morning of June 24, 1872, at 6:15 a.m., Captain T.A. Scott’s steam-lighter Wallace headed out from the government wharf, located at the back of the Custom House, bound for Race Rock with a load of stone for the light’s foundation. “When about twenty rods from the dock she exploded her boilers with a tremendous concussion, scattering the fragments in all directions, and dealing death and fearful injuries upon the unfortunate crew.” (New -York Herald, June 25, 1872)

While Captain Scott was able to jump overboard and escape injury, most of the thirteen men aboard were not so lucky. Ultimately, three men died from the explosion, including two crew members killed by the initial blast, and the engineer, William Whitler, of Jersey City, who died after being taken ashore. Many other crew suffered from burns and wounds that were described as “frightful, the hot steam and fragments of the exploded boiler making dreadful work.”

The Wallace—a $10,000 boom-derrick lighter owned by Capt. Scott—sank immediately, the force of the blast being so strong that fragments were found 100-yards from the explosion site. After the blast, the Captain of the cutter James Campbell launched a boat to render assistance and the injured were quickly taken back to shore into the Custom House. The Collector on duty, George H. Marshal, converted the building into a make-shift hospital and summoned medical assistance. Later that morning all but the engineer were moved out of the building “to quieter quarters.” Engineer Whitler, too wounded to move, subsequently died of his wounds. The cause of the accident was attributed in some accounts to dynamite carried on board, and in others to a faulty boiler.

Remarkably, these three deaths were the only fatalities during the arduous seven-year construction of Race Rock Light.

That’s Right

RACE ROCK!

Even after a couple of weeks, it’s difficult to grasp. Receiving New London Harbor Light from the federal government, in October, 2010, was the end of a nine-year process. With Race Rock Light, the entire event, from site-visit to receipt of the key, took just over one year, start to finish.

So, you might ask, why would the New London Maritime Society want another lighthouse -- even one so legendary as Race Rock Light? Let’s be clear: we don’t. But it is our mission to protect and preserve New London’s maritime heritage. And so we do -- even when it means taking a rather breath-taking leap of faith, like this.

We’re committed to preserving our important heritage sites for future generations. Ultimately, a national maritime heritage park of the historic and natural sites on eastern Long Island Sound might be the outcome. There is no more thrilling site nor compelling story than that of this lighthouse. The only question here should be: how could we have let the opportunity pass?!

The historic Race Rock Light Station was conveyed to the New London Maritime Society on June 27, 2013.

We’re pleased to announce that New London’s Harbor Light is the featured lighthouse for Connecticut in the 2013 United States Postal Service’s New England Coastal Lighthouses series. That’s us, far right! The lighthouse stamps will be issued July 13, 2013, at 10 AM, in a special US Postal Service ceremony beneath the Custom House tent - and you’re invited to attend. That weekend is SailFest in New London, so plan to be there early. Philatelist Alan Bentz has created a special first day of issue cachet, which will be for sale at the Museum following the ceremony and at the New London post office. It sells for $5.
